UNEXPECTEDLY, RAY BRADBURY...

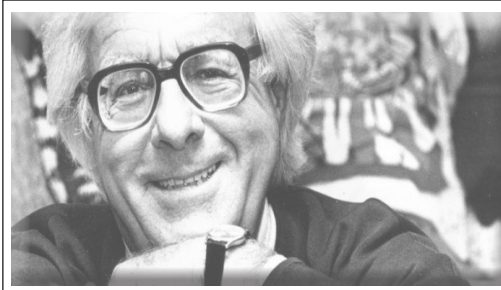

by Maurine R. Donnelly

I opened a book by Neil Gaiman, Trigger Warning: Short Fictions and Disturbances, -- and imagine my surprise when I found, in the Introduction where the author comments on each of the twenty-four fantastical short stories, Ray Bradbury's name popped up. The story was called, "The Man Who Forgot Ray Bradbury." Gaiman said he wrote the story as a 90th birthday present for Mr. Bradbury, a long-time friend. It was a "love letter and a thank you to an author who made me dream, taught me about words and what they could accomplish and who never let me down." His editor/friend read the story to Bradbury at his bedside.

Bradbury was born in Waukegan, Illinois on August 22, 1920 and died in California on June 5, 2012. He and I both have a Swedish ancestor - his mother and my father's father were both from Sweden. It's nice to know. His best known work, Fahrenheit 451 was published in 1953 and made into a movie in 1966.

He loved libraries and books, and said that he was "completely educated in the library," giving all his papers to the Waukegan Public Library. Gaiman said, "Bradbury left the world a better place and left better places in it: the red sands and canals of Mars, the mid-western Halloweens and small towns and dark carnivals. And he kept writing. He said it was important for a writer to write every day."

Bradbury was a true original with a wonderful imagination.

"I don't believe in colleges and universities. I believe in libraries because most students don't have any money. When I graduated from high school, it was during the Depression and we had no money. I couldn't go to college, so I went to the library three days a week for 10 years."

The library has more than twenty Bradbury titles and books about him in all the departments.
